

Antique & Handicraft Display Proves Interesting to Many

The Senior W.A. held a successful Antique and Handicraft Display and Tea in Kiefer's Hall on August 16.

Surely it would be difficult to find lovelier embroideries, crochet work, patch work, etc., anywhere than those of our own ladies here. The various nationalities that help to make our community also help to add variety and beauty to the handicraft that can be shown on such an occasion.

Certainly one of the most interesting exhibits was a beautiful oil painting of the head and shoulders of a Hereford bull. This was the work of Mrs. J. J. Burrell and all who saw it were astonished at the perfection of every detail. The animal seemed to stand right out from the canvas and the more closely you looked at it the more certain you became that if you touched it you could feel its curly hair with your fingers. Mrs. Burrell tells us that she has had no training in art whatever. In that case she must be one of those who are born with the gift of putting on canvas those extra touches which make a picture truly come alive. We understand that one of our district stockmen, Harry Long, has bought this painting of the Hereford and we feel sure he will enjoy his purchase for the rest of his life.

There was much interest among the antiquaries too. Perhaps the oldest relic on show was a sampler worked by Lady Diana Manners about 200 years ago. This was loaned by the lady's great great niece Mrs. R. D. Smallwood. A very lovely hand-woven spread owned by Mrs. H. Halverson and worked by her grandmother in the 1850's was also greatly admired.

Old photographs of early days in Irma added a lot of interest. Mrs. J. C. McLean loaned some relics of early days in Edmonton. These included a directory of Edmonton dated 1894. This had the names of just about everybody between Calgary and Lloydminster, hired girls and all. The telephone numbers went from 2 to 50 and ended there.

Mrs. McLean also showed a copy of the first Edmonton Bulletin and other items of interest.

Mr. H. G. Thunell kindly sent some early copies of the Irma Times. These were much enjoyed and we hope to publish items from time to time taken from these old papers.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

THE BIG ONE

By RUSSELL WILSEY

Well, It Wouldn't Seem Right,
Somehow, If He Actually
Landed The Big One.

CHARLIE SMALLPAW lifted his paddle slowly, trailing drops that glistened like gems in the morning light. Already the night mists were evaporating, leaving the lake placid, marred only by the wake of the canoe.

In the bow Mr. Sanders relaxed, his hands absently sliding over the fishing rod across his lap. Charlie squinted up at the sun, studied the rock-shored island, then nodded. Mr. Sanders cautiously tapped the ashes from his pipe, lumbered up his rod. The steel wand swished above his head. The plug rocketed out. Mr. Sanders waited patiently while it sank and he began to reel in slowly. Charlie's sun-leathered face and black eyes were expressionless but his mind was keyed to a pitch. Down where Mr. Sanders' plug was twitching lurged the great ones, the biggest and most vicious of all freshwater fish, the muskellunge.

On "muskie" in particular was Mr. Sanders' angling for the big one that had defied him year after year. The very first season that Charlie had guided him to this secluded lake, Mr. Sanders had been hit by the big one. Back and forth the battle had gone. Tqen it had parted the leader and disappeared.

Mr. Sanders still faced the big one with his light rod and line. And for him Charlie had preserved the lake and its big fish.

But the years were telling on the faithful angler. It was taking longer and longer for him to cover the miles through the woods to the railroad spur. He had been warned about over-exertion. Without putting it into words, Charlie knew this might be Mr. Sanders' last season.

All week they had fished the familiar spots, gradually working toward the lair of the big one. This was their last morning, the last trip out.

Mr. Sanders worked his third cast, his hands skilfully operating the reel. He glanced over at Charlie, his broad, ruddy face breaking into a grin.

Mr. Sanders' hands paused. He could feel the plug flinging. Was it touching bottom? He waited, his heart thudding.

And then it came! Line whirled off the reel at incredible speed. Mr. Sanders counted while the spool narrowed. Consciousness came back to the hook.

A crown crested Charlie's brow as he aided Mr. Sanders' fight, swinging the canoe about to meet the fish's swift, forceful maneuvers. Again and again it pulled out line, only to be forced back by the twitching wand of steel in Mr. Sanders' hand. It sounded the bottom, it rolled, trying to throw off the hook. But Mr. Sanders fought grimly, meeting its every trick, his breath growing sharper, his shoulders convulsing with effort.

As Charlie studied the fish's antics, his brow deepened. Several times he bit his lip as Mr. Sanders struggled desperately to meet a new rush.

"I think we got him... this time," he gasped minutes later as the great shadow swam into view.

"Maybe," Charlie grunted, shaking his head. Nearer and nearer the long, stream-lined shadow came, its head shaking again, meeting its every trick, his breath growing sharper, his shoulders convulsing with effort.

"Easy, Charlie," Mr. Sanders cried as his guide grasped his gaff. The shadow reached the stern. Mr. Sanders leaned over to look at it, but Charlie waved him back. His black eyes intent on the water, Charlie slipped his iron beneath the Suddenly the water boiled, an immense tail smashing out and showing the canoe. Charlie heaved swiftly with his gaff. But it was too late. The leader parted with a pistol-sharp crack and the shadow was gone and miles off.

For the few moments the two of them were held motionless, straining after something irrevocably lost. While the fish Mr. Sanders had just released, glided at the leader, laid his rod aside. As Charlie turned the canoe towards camp, he took out his pipe and milled it.

They had almost reached shore when he finally spoke. "In a way, Charlie, I'm sort of glad I missed again. If I'd got him this time... I'd stopped. 'Well, it wouldn't seem right, somehow, if I actually did land him.'"

Charlie nodded. Yes, it was better this way. Now Mr. Sanders would never see what Charlie had seen. While the fish Mr. Sanders had just released, glided at the leader, laid his rod aside. As Charlie turned the canoe towards camp, he took out his pipe and milled it.

Removing Ink
Stains From Fabrics

1. Rinse or sponge the spot immediately with clear water.
 2. For washable ink—soak in soap suds (or detergents if fabric is not washable) until spot disappears.
 3. For permanent ink—lemon juice or mild household bleach.
 4. For ballpoint ink—carbon tetrachloride.
 5. For all treatments—a final rinsing in clear water is vital.
- With all treatments it is best to use a "percolating" technique: Place the material in a bowl. Pour in small bowl and drip the lemon juice, bleach or cleaning fluid through the material a drop at a time.
- If the spot is on a rug or other heavy material which can't be changed in this way, keep changing the cloth you apply the fluid with.
- Final caution: Do not use carbolic tetrachloride on acetate rayons.

Rain Dance

Ancient Ceremonies Revived
By Saskatchewan Indians

INDIAN HEAD, Sask. — Ancient ceremonies of the Rain Dance have been revived by Saskatchewan Indians after a lapse of many years. Assiniboine Indians on the Sinitulatu reserve near here staged a rain dance following another held near Carlyle, Sask., where Indians from both sides of the border participated in costumes which district residents had not seen before.

The revivals mark a part of Indian religious life being passed on by older members of the tribes to the younger generations at a time when it was about extinct.

On the Sinitulatu reserve, only the dancers were costumed, their bodies painted with patterns interpreted from dreams.

But much of the pageantry was lost. Ordinary farm clothes of other participants appeared incongruous with the ancient rites.

Although called a rain dance, the Sinitulatu ceremony could be called a sun dance. Its prayers might be for rain, sunshine, peace, health or the general welfare of the tribe. Special requests are made for the healing of the sick or the protection of those in danger.

Three women took part in the ceremony to plead for the safe return of soldiers sent in Korea and Germany.

No written accounts exist within the tribe of the ritual handed down verbally from generation to generation. Thus there were many variations among the bands who gathered on the reserve from File Hills, Moose Mountain, and Crooked Lake in Canada and Fort Belknap and Fort Peck in Montana.

Tangled trails led six miles from here to the camping ground.

In the centre of a secluded area stood the medicine lodge, constructed of poles covered with kelp branches.

In the centre of the lodge was the upright Sacred Tree, painted on all sides. It was striped to represent lightning and tied with broad streamers of red and white and blue cloth at the top and other colors at the bottom.

The colors have a definite significance. Red is for sacrifice, blue for the sky, white for day and black for night.

Extending from the Sacred Tree were 40 poles, said to represent the 40 days Christ spent in the wilderness.

Inside the lodge a railing formed an inner circle behind which the ceremonial dancers performed.

Men with drums were seated around a buffalo hide. They chanted and sang the ancient songs. At intervals, the dancers rose from behind the inner circular partition, their painted bodies away to the drum rhythm.

Most kept time to the drums with whistles made of eagle-wing bones. Feathers dangled from the whistles, held in clenched teeth. The dancers also carried large eagle feathers which they waved as they danced.

Albert Eschappie, George O'Watch, Charles Ryder and others led the ceremonies. All fasted 12 hours before the ceremony began and continued their fast for two ritual days. Then they joined in the feast and merry-making which climaxed the reunion.

Alberta's 1953 production boosted Canada to ninth place among the world's 43 oil-producing countries. In 1950 Canada was 13th.

A National Library

BECAUSE CANADA is a widespread country there are many thousands of citizens who live long distances from the nation's capital, but whether they have visited Ottawa or not, most Canadians are familiar with the architectural beauty and historical associations of the parliament buildings there. Many have seen the parliamentary library which remained after fire destroyed the main part of the building during the First World War, and those who have visited it will recall that many valuable books and archives are kept in storage because of lack of space for them in this library. In the report of the Royal Commission on Arts, Letters and Sciences, made last year, it was pointed out that Canada was now the only civilized country in the world without a national library.

Need Has Been Felt

The parliamentary library has long been inadequate to meet the requirements of a growing nation and the need for a national library has been felt for some time. It was recently announced by Prime Minister St. Laurent that plans are now being made to build and equip a national library at Ottawa. It will be several years before the project is completed, since a new building will have to be designed and built and numerous other preparations made for it.

Is A Sign Of Progress

The planning of a national library is another sign of Canada's growth as a nation. Much has been heard of industrial progress in recent years, but the Royal Commission drew attention to the cultural advances which have been made, and presented recommendations for furthering these advances. The need for a national library was one of the many recommendations made by the commission, and it is one upon which many Canadians will be glad to see that action is being taken. A national library will not only be a fitting part of our parliament buildings but it will fill a real need in providing a centre for books and records of interest and value to the whole nation, and will allow the parliamentary library to be used entirely for its original purpose, that of serving parliament.

Road Being Built For Mill

PRINCE ALBERT.—A road now is under construction in northern Saskatchewan for use as a pulp haul when a mill is opened up in the Prince Albert district.

"The road, from Candle Lake to Leonard Lake, 43 miles, is in the heart of a huge timber stand of white spruce—the commercial tree of western Canada," Robert N. Gooding, head of the construction branch of the Resources Department, said here.

"This is the biggest project of the year for the branch," he said. "Since construction started May 24, our crews have reached a point eight miles north of the Torch river in the white spruce belt. There still remains 28 miles of bulldozing and road work."

Eggs will not burst while boiling if one end of each egg is pricked with a needle before placing in the water. This makes an outlet for air and prevents the shell from cracking.

Funny and Otherwise

"My boy," said the successful man lecturing his son on the importance of thrift, "when I was your age I carried water for a gang of bricklayers."

"I'm proud of you, father," answered the boy. "If it hadn't been for your pluck and perseverance, I might have had to do something of that sort myself."

Father: "Well, he doesn't say all of it yet, but he's got as far as the 'Baa, baa'."

"Look here, young man, what's the idea bringing my daughter home at four in the morning?"

"Well, sir, I'm on an early shift and I have to be at work at five."

"I couldn't believe it when I heard you were in hospital. Why, only last night I saw you dancing with a pretty blonde."

"Yes, so did my wife."

These will be familiar pictures in your kitchen during the next few weeks! Whether you make jams, jellies or marmalades use the best fruits, the best equipment and the best methods, and you will be able to serve these colorful "touches of summer" with pride.

Most people have their own favorite recipes, but in case you haven't, here are a few that might help you out, plus a few hints for the inexperienced in jam and jelly making.

First wash, rinse and sterilize your jars by inverting them in 1 to 2 inches of hot water, bring to boil and boil 15 minutes. Leave in hot water until you need them.

The fruit, which is prepared according to the individual recipe, should be measured accurately, and its best not to use more than three quarts for one lot of jam.

Black Currant Jam
Wash, top and tail 6 cups black currants. Add 5 cups water and bring to boil and precook 15 minutes uncovered. Add 6 1/2 cups sugar, bring to boil, and boil uncovered 5 to 8 minutes or until it reaches jam stage. Yields about 7 1/2 cups.

Gooseberry Jam
Wash, top and tail 12 cups gooseberries. Add 3 cups water, bring to boil, and precook 15 minutes, uncovered. Add 7 1/2 cups sugar. Bring to boil, and boil, uncovered, 5 to 7 minutes or until it reaches jam stage.

Jewel Jam
Six cups unspiced cherries (4 cups pitted), 4 cups gooseberries, 4 cups red currants, 4 cups raspberries, 8 cups sugar.

Wash fruit. Pit cherries, top and tail gooseberries, stem currants. Combine fruits, crush slightly, bring to boil and boil uncovered, 15 minutes. Add sugar, bring to boil and boil uncovered until it reaches jam stage, 10 to 12 minutes. Pour into sterilized jars. Cool slightly and seal. Yields about 10 cups.

Conservation Program

Protecting Watersheds Of Rivers That Flow Eastward From Rocky Mountains

EDMONTON.—A conservation program of importance to all Canada is being carried out on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains. The program, under the management of the Dominion-Provincial Eastern Rockies Forest Conservation Board, is aimed at protecting the watersheds of the great rivers that flow eastward across the prairies.

The Conservation Board, set up four years ago, has made long strides toward assuring the 9,000-square-mile area under its jurisdiction will stay "green."

A network of 16 look-out towers equipped with short-wave radio equipment has been built for protection against forest fires. This has been augmented by an ambitious road program to make heavily-wooded regions readily accessible.

The board also maintains close supervision of lumbering and cattle grazing in the area. To combat erosion there must be sufficient ground cover left to guarantee a continuous yield of trees.

Experts make continuing surveys of insect infestation and implement control measures to combat serious outbreaks. At present the forests on the eastern slopes are considered much healthier than those on other parts of the country.

Mr. Jensen, Alberta Deputy Minister of Lands and Forests and a member of the Conservation Board, said the objective of the program is to restore the watershed to its condition of 100 years ago, at the same time utilizing its resources to the best possible advantage.

Mr. Jensen said the eastern slopes also represent a valuable potential tourist attraction. Many tourists prefer more rugged country than the conventional resort affords, he said, and the Eastern Rockies is an ideal area for an outdoor holiday.

But he stressed the prime importance of the board's work—protecting the watershed. He said history has proven that nations which fail to protect their forest and water resources cannot survive.

Grass silage has 75 additional men employed in the grass silage program. Some are building the popular and easily constructed trench silo. The most common type is the upright cylinder, in addition to the snow fence and stack silo.

Taking Census Expected To Cost $7,000,000

OTTAWA.—The job of counting heads in Canada—the census undertaken every 10 years—is expected to cost about $7,000,000—an anticipated saving of $2,000,000 over the original estimate.

Herbert Marshall, Dominion statistician, said in an interview that when work on the 1951 census is completed the cost likely will be between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 less than the original estimate of $9,000,000 when it was undertaken last year.

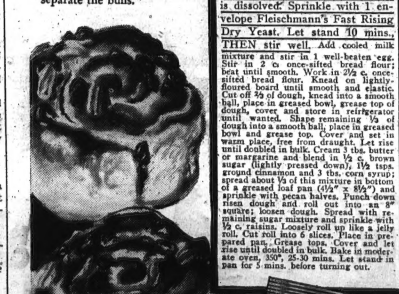

Mr. Marshall said considerable work remains to be done on compiling figures collected in the survey.

PRAIRIE PHONES
Prairie telephone systems of the Prairie Provinces had 303,819 telephones in 1951, or 10 per cent. of the national total.

Forecasts Serious Cutworm Plague Next Year

REGINA.—The cutworm forecast for next year indicates that the pale western cutworm infestation in Saskatchewan is likely to be as serious as it was this year. R. E. McKenzie, director of the Saskatchewan Agriculture Department Plant Industry Branch, said today.

The forecast is based on surveys by the insect laboratories at Saskatoon and Lethbridge.

The area of infestation is bounded by a line extending from Macklin through Humboldt to Regina and Radville, and south to the United States border.

Damage from the pale western cutworm was not serious or widespread this year.

To prevent infestations in the summer-fallow crop next spring, all weak growth should be destroyed in fields at present being summer-fallowed by late July and the fields left undisturbed throughout August and the first half of September.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

Vacation With Love

By W. H. DAVIES

JOAN paused to brush away the tears and resumed packing. They'd been right when they said she might get hurt. But they'd also been wrong in saying she was foolish and extravagant. Until now it had been a glorious adventure. It had been worth every minute of the two years she had spent working and saving and planning. But now she was leaving. Not because her vacation was over but because her dream world had collapsed about her when Mark Stephens went out of her life.

When first she arrived at the exclusive resort it had been a little difficult to adjust herself. But her natural grace and poise won out.

It was at the pool that Mark had climbed out of the water and into her heart. She liked the casual way they had met. She had been sitting on the edge. He had tossed his head to clear the hair from his eyes. A cold spray had fallen across her shoulders. She had jumped and uttered a little cry.

"I'm sorry," he said. "It isn't really cold."

Joan smiled. "I haven't been in yet."

"I know," he said.

As Joan wondered what he meant she saw his tall, little body move toward her. She covered her eyes with her hands and waited for the cold water to engulf her. But nothing happened and when she looked he was laughing.

"I couldn't do it," he said. "I couldn't bear the thought of seeing all that beautiful hair wet and stringy. Good thing you weren't wearing your cap."

"That was very considerate," she said, smiling.

They were constantly together after that. . . riding, swimming, walking. Mark was different somehow. There was something about his easy manner that made her feel she had known him for years. Yet he was quiet and reserved when they were together in public. He never talked about himself and he didn't ask questions. Joan was glad he didn't ask questions.

Nothing unusual had happened between them until the night before he left. They had had a wonderful time, and when it was over he had accompanied her to her door. Then he had taken her in his arms for the first time and kissed her. When he left he had pressed her hand.

"Good-night, Joan," he said, and left her.

Staring at the ceiling in the darkness, she had felt uneasy. But she remembered their date for lunch and went to sleep with a smile.

It was almost one that afternoon and Mark hadn't telephoned. She dressed and went down. The head waiter showed her to the table that she and Mark had pre-empted. There was a note for her.

"My dear Joan:

"Maybe I'm a coward, but this seemed the easiest way for both of us. Forgive me for leaving without seeing you again. I didn't want to fall in love with you but I did. I know it wouldn't work out. Please try to understand.

Love, Mark"

Alone in her room, Joan yielded to tears.

Next day, everything she did seemed hollow without Mark.

On the train that evening she found herself re-reading his note. She guessed that he must have known about her from the beginning. He was probably just being kind. That would be like Mark.

Back at the city station, she waited in line as the string of cars moved slowly picking up the passengers. The night air was damp and foggy. Now the doorman was lifting her bags into a cab and holding the door open. He relayed her address to the driver.

The cab whistled her home. As it pulled to a stop in front of the small little apartment house the driver half turned his head toward her.

"Right?" he asked.

Joan nodded. As the driver came around to help her she pressed a bill into his hand.

"I can manage," she said as she picked up the bags.

"Joan?"

She stopped.

"Joan? It's me . . . Mark."

Joan dropped her bags and ran into his arms.

"Mark . . . oh, Mark," she sobbed.

"Why didn't you tell me?" he was saying. "I thought you were one of those weak debs. I was spending my vacation there because I thought it would be fun."

Now the tears were running down her cheeks but she was laughing as she clung to him.

Prairie Sky

For those who like to see the sky, there is a place only a little way out from Dinsmore, Saskatchewan — or only a little way as prairie distances run. This place has the original kind of matted grass on it still around a long-ago trampled track that encloses a rocky hillock. It is a Druid circle older than Druids and a fairy ring in a land too vast and terrible and magnificent for fairies. It is a good place from which to see the sky. At night a radio can often be heard thumping in a lighted farmhouse, cars and trucks drum along behind their white fangs and occasionally whining overhead as they play with the undulating sound of internal combustion engines or the tea kettle whistle of jets, but from the upwelling bit of prairie these are of mild interest only. The sky is the principal thing.

There is a great deal of night sky, usually with decorations of stars and planets. The Milky Way has more individual parts to it than, say, the Milky Way over a city. And sometimes there is a moon far larger than ordinary moons. By day also this set-aside, ancient spot is a good place to see the sky, enormous with spaced, rounded-top clouds. It may even be, as prairie people will tell you, that anyone who has looked long on the sky from this place or others on the wide flat of the plains is likely to be the more resolute and profound in his character.

Aluminum Centre Growing Rapidly

VANCOUVER, B.C.—A new city in British Columbia is growing almost quickly enough to see.

It's the community of Kitimat, now a township and the centre of a big, big building aluminum project of the Aluminum Company of Canada.

The project itself is estimated to cost $50,000,000, while the company says a total of more than $12,000,000 will be spent in the next three years on development of the township.

That is outside of capital which outside firms will spend on hotels, banks, department stores and other buildings. In addition, the federal government plans a building to house the post office, customs office and other federal agencies.

Most of the $12,000,000 will be spent in 1945 when the town will have a population of up to 7,000. Predictions are an eventual population of 50,000 in Kitimat. 2998

Breeding Grounds Of Whooping Cranes Discovered North Of P.A.

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask.—Two United States Field and Wildlife Service workers reported discovery of the summer breeding ground of the almost-extinct whooping crane, a mystery that has baffled ornithologists for more than half a century.

The two workers, flew into this northern Saskatchewan city after an air tour of Canada's far north.

They spotted two adult cranes in the marshes north of Great Slave Lake, one on July 11, one the next day. They brought their Gruman amphibian down to within 100 feet to make several passes over the birds and took both color and black and white photographs.

The two scientists are Robert Henry Smith of Medford, Ore., and Everett L. Sutton of Aberdeen, S.D. Significance of the whooping crane breeding ground discovery, Mr. Smith said can be gauged by the fact that only a few specimens of this four-foot waterfowl remain on the North American continent. About 30 spend their winters on the Texas coast, 3,000 miles from where the birds breed.

The Audubon Society may back such a project, with instructions to their field expeditions to find out what enemies have reduced the flocks of whooping cranes throughout the years—what predators go after their eggs or their nestlings, or that attack the adult birds.

BUY GAS EARLY

Driver Must Pay For Car Accident

CALGARY.—The Alberta Appeal Court has upheld a judgment of the Supreme Court of Alberta awarding $3,000 damages to Muriel Johnson of Calgary as the result of an accident in 1948.

The case is considered important by lawyers as it re-establishes an old principle of law that even if there is negligence on the part of the pedestrian, if the cause of the accident is the driver's negligence then he is liable despite the contributory negligence act.

Peak Record Wheat Crop Anticipated

(By Harold Morrison, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The farmer may help spell out the depth of Canada's wealth this year in a record-breaking wheat crop that some experts anticipate may run as high as 600,000,000 bushels.

It may take another week or two before government statisticians complete a farm-to-farm survey of wheat-crop production. But the initial and still unofficial forecast makes for some exciting prospects, not only for the farmer but the business man as well.

Although Canada is steadily advancing through a production evolution—changing her character from agrarian to mostly industrial — a great deal of her prosperity still is wrapped up in the prosperity of the western farmer.

With the world still hankering for more wheat, the outlook for wheat sales this year and next is bright and the prospects are that if the record crop emerges, it may bring more than $1,000,000,000 to Canada's pockets.

Some farmers, and business men, too, have lost out in the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease which temporarily eliminated the big United States market for Canadian meat and livestock. The loss is expected to run possibly to $100,000,000.

The record wheat crop may wipe out some of that loss. Canada's biggest crop was in 1937 when farmers produced 566,000,000 bushels. Last year they almost repeated the performance with 562,000,000. This year they appear to be out to make a killing.

The pessimism caused by reports of widespread outbreaks of race 1938 is mostly gone. Reports now indicate that the damage from this infection likely will be negligible. The weather man has been kind. An early crop is in prospect and with it Canada may take another step on the road to continuing economic prosperity.
